SLAYER SENT TO GRAND JURY

Wound on Head Resulted in Death After Treatment at City Home Hospital.

When James Fleet, colored, was arraigned in Police Court yesterday morning for the murder of Jessie Crawley, another negro, on January 12, a sensation was sprung by Gilbert K. Pollock, counsel for Fleet, with an intimation that the defense would claim that Crawley died, not primarily from wounds inflicted by Fleet, but from lack of proper medical attention in the City Home. Aithough Dr. George Ben Johnston, chief of the visiting staff at the City Home, in a measure substantiated Mr. Pollock's assertions, Fleet was sent on to the grand jury. On the witness stand yesterday Dr. Johnston voluntarily declared that Crawley's fracture of the skull might not have proved fatal if the attention given him had been more painstaking. He freely assumed any responsibility which might fall upon his shoulders, and urged that Fleet be not tried for murder. Dr. Johnston was not summoned to court as a witness, but learning from rumor what lines the defense would take, appeared of his own accord to give the court a full statement of the facts surrounding Crawley's death, in the City Home four days after he was struck by a rock.

Crawley's death, in the City Home four days after he was struck by a rock.

Dr Johnston's Statement.

"I am one of the surgeons attached to the City Hospital, and it is my duty to examine all serious cases," said Dr. Johnston on the stand. "This man Crawley was injured early in the morning. I was called by telephone and informed of his presence at the hospital, and that he was not unconscious. The next morning I saw the man. He showed no symptoms of a serious character, and I did not undo the bandages that had been placed on his head.

the bandages that had been placed on his head.

"The following day I saw him again and still there were up unfavorable symptoms. Three days thereafter an abscess formed on the brain two inches in front of the spot where the skull was fractured. I immediately opened the skull and dralned the abscess.

"My purpose in coming here voluntarily is to ask that the man who perpetrated the act not be tried for his afe. There is an element of uncertainty in the victim's death. Perhaps if we had been a little more painstaking his life might have been saved.

The building is being erected by convict labor without cost to the State The material was purchased with funds derived from the sale of farm products raised by the prisoners. All labor is being done by them.

The building is practically completed with the exception of a few of the smaller details. It is constructed of brick and concrete and is fireproof. The lower floor is divided into several rooms which will be used as cell rooms for the prisoners. It will be equipped with samitary beds and baths. The upper floor will be fitted up as a hospital and quarters for the guards.

Paragraph Pulpit LAW AND LOVE.

Unitarianism stands for the great and precious thought of the unity of law and love, in God. Modern science told man for the first time that he lived in a law-governed universe. Man heard and trembled. He thought it meant that law, as a dead, heartless abstraction, had taken the place of God, and that he man, was to be henceforth an erphan in a bereaved universe. But no, this was only his first, superficial judgment. Deeper looking discovered that God was in the law the very, meaning and essence and beating heart of the law itself—Unitarian Publicity Committee.
